Dr. Kelsey: The Woman For The Job

Dr. Frances Oldham Kelsey is persistent, vigilant and devoted to standards higher than expediency. Because of these characteristics, the U. S. largely was spared the infant malformations that resulted from widespread distribution of thalidomide abroad.

Dr. Kelsey also is a pharmacologist, a physician specializing in the effects of drugs on humans. Her professional qualifications, along with her personal qualities, therefore make her an admirable choice to head a new federal office for screening requests to test drugs on humans.

As a realist, Dr. Kelsey knows her agency's effectiveness will depend on the regulations under which it must operate. These are now being threshed out in conferences between U.S. government officials and drug manufacturers in accordance with legislative revisions enacted last

The new laws sailed through Congress under impetus of the thalidomide tragedies. But laws are subject to different interpretations under varying conditions. Regulations applied by the U. S. Food and Drug Administration are more specific. Accordingly, the drug industry has concentrated its attention on them.

The manufacturers understandably are concerned about having initiative bogged in bureaucracy, the burden of excessive paperwork or invasions of secrecy that might benefit competitors. But these fears cannot be used to cover loopholes through which dangerous practices could creep.

It is not unreasonable to require drugs to be tested first on animals or to require the specific consent of patients receiving experimental drugs; or notification to the FDA when doctors are given such drugs; or that their qualifications as clinical investigators be established; or that they be required to submit immediate reports of side-effects; or that the burden of proving both the safety and effectiveness of new drugs be placed on the manufacturer.

Best Sort Of Foreign Aid

It is often said of conservatives that they are mean, curmudgeonly fellows who like to see babies starve to death. And when a conservative-or an old-fashioned the common retort is that men on the Right Wing of contemporary politics have no feeling for the needs of less fortunate countries.

In the arguments, pro and con, over foreign aid, the fact that it is generally unsuccessful when it passes through the hands of governments is pretty much overlooked. Yet even liberals such as J. Kenneth Galbraith, our Ambassador to India, are coming to see that intergovernmental grants and loans tend to get short-circuited. They are wasted, so to speak, on Cadillacs for potentates, and the common people, far from benefitting from the money, cower in the alleyways, and pray that their children won't be run over in the

When foreign aid follows voluntary patterns, however, it is seldom wasted. And the fact is that some of our most effective foreign aid comes as a reflex of programs developed by far-sighted business men.

There is Mr. J. Paul Austin, the new President of the Coca-Cola Company, for example. With a long background of experience in Africa and Europe, Mr. Austin is a mine of information about the unintended local benefits of American business activity in foreign parts. Coca-Cola went into foreign countries for a reason that was eminently acceptable to its stockholders: it was looking to make more money. But that, as Mr. Austin points out, proved to be only half of the tale.

In the Middle East, even as late as the Nineteen Fifties, thirsty people drank germ-infested water out of community tin cups that were dipped, unwashed, into malodorous goatskins. For a short period the appearance of Coca-Cola in the Middle East seemed to be helping only that segment of the population that could afford the local equivalent of a nickel for a drink. But soon a number of secondary-and unintended-effects became apparent.

It so happens that Coca-Cola depends on an absolutely pure water supply. To provide enough water to mix with concentrate, local bottlers had to import the latest and most efficient methods of water purification. Local politicos, watching sewerage water being transformed by running it through modern filters, suddenly saw a bright light. The example spread to Southeastern Asia: Singapore, for instance, gave itself a modern water system after looking at a Coke bottling plant. And in distant San Saivador in Central America, where Coca-Cola had an early program, the government used the local Coke bottling works to supply water for the town when an earthquake disrupted the municipal

In its dealings with foreign countries, Coca-Cola is careful to avoid the taunts of "coca-colonization" by letting local entrepreneurs build and own the bottling plants, the glass works, the metal-working establishments, and the lithographic industries, that are needed to bring the product to the customer. But the benefits deriving from the diffusion of ownership among the local populations were not limited to indigenous capitalists. A metal working industry, formed to produce bottle caps, soon branched out in many countries to provide other types of metal products.

Glass works created to make soft drink containers found themselves taking orders for medicine bottles. Local truck services, using Coca-Cola maintenance manuals, were quickly plunged into a general garage business, with the result that the lifetime of a truck in the Middle East or Africa has been extended to five years instead of the traditional one. As for the lithography needed to make Coca-Cola posters, it created modern printing businesses in a number of countries.

To its establishments in Atlanta, Georgia, and elsewhere in the United States and Canada, Coca-Cola brings hundreds of young native foreign executives every year on its own version of the Fulbright scholar-Turbaned Indians mingle with Chinese from Malaya and Latins from South America as they go about the United States for three-month capsule courses in modern management techniques. And the hundreds who go back to Africa and Asia carry advanced management know-how with them to indoctrinate thousands of their countrymen who never leave home.

Rep. Powell Fires Female Aide; More Background On 'Skybolt'

WASHINGTON — Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, the "Harlem globe-trotter," has fired one of the young ladies whom he took with him on the famed junket last summer when he asked the State Department to arrange tickets for the best shows in London, a table at the Lido night club in Paris, and a possible cruise among the Greek islands.

The lady dropped is Mrs. Tamara Wall, a lawyer and former special counsel for Powell's Labor and Education Committee. Mrs. Wall accompanied the beautiful Miss Corrine Huff, the first Negro to be chosen as Miss Ohio, on the Powell trip.

Miss Huff, a runner-up in the Miss America beauty contest, is being retained as a receptionist in Powell's office.

Mrs. Wall, a brilliant young lawyer, is perhaps the only government worker ever to be interned in Siberia and escape.

Mrs. Wall was only seven years old when she was sent to Siberia during the war. Born in Russia, her family were arrested by the Germans on the way to America when the war broke and returned to Russia where the Soviet government, suspicious of anyone residing in Germany, sent them to

JFK's Proposal To Macmillan

More information has now leaked out regarding the Skybolt and the conversations between Prime Minister Macmillan and President Kennedy over this much-discussed air-to-ground missile.

At the Nassau talks, Kennedy told the British Prime Minister that the United States would go ahead with the original Skybolt deal whereby the United States developed this missile for the British, provided England paid one-half of the remaining development costs - about $2,300,000,000

Macmillan, however, declined, accepted the Polaris instead. Since then, despite all the hue and cry in the British press, the British government has already started plans for constructing seven Polaris submarines. They will carry a total of 112 Polaris missiles, which is 12 more than the 100 Skybolts which the British had originally intended to buy.

Incidentally, the Air Force has been completely on the level with the President in its arguments for the Skybolt. I now find that the flamboyant colored advertisements which appeared in the magazines during the height of the Skybolt arguments were OK'd by the Defense Department, not the Air Force.

Furthermore, they were OK'd in October 1961, not October 1962 -more than one year ago. Obviously, the Defense Department did not know the missile was going to be the center of such an international controversy at the time. Douglas had published the ads earlier, then reused them at this crucial time to influence public and Congressional thinkcombat over the House and Senate rules, the new session of Congress seems likely to settle down to a pretty dull routine in most of the major legislative areas.

To be sure, another try will be made, this time perhaps successfully, to pass the medicare bill; and there will be other, subsidiary excitements. But the sole topic of really vivid interest and great long term significance still seems pretty certain to be taxation-pluslong-term-economic policy.

This is the outlook because the Kennedy administration's proposals for tax reduction and tax reform are slated to be decidedly more radical and far reaching than has yet been realized. Of course, the plans now being drawn up in the Treasury and elsewhere may be sharply scaled down this week, when the President and Secretary of Treasury Douglas

Dillon take a final look at them. On present prospects, however the coming session will be different from any other since the days of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, in that its central, dominating preoccupation will be an argument about the real shape and true motive forces of the American economy. This is certainly unavoidable if the President does not change the present plan to present a tax program in which economically stimulating tax reductions will bulk much larger than tax reforms. In crude terms, what is now to be expected is a request for reductions of individual and corporate income taxes which may cost the Treasury from $12 to $13 billion; plus a request for certain changes in tax base which will entail some further loss of revenue; plus a request for loopholeclosing changes in the tax base hands. least at the present level of business activity, may well run to $9 or $10 billion. The proposal to sacrifice revenue on this scale is to be put forward when the budget is already unbalanced, and in a year when Federal expenditure requests are actually due to increase. These simple facts insure that the main debate will concern the inner nature of the national economy.

The proposed tax reforms will also arouse embittered controversy, as might be expected. The oil depletion allowance is to be tackled, though with cautious proposal to sacrifice revenue by tax cutting is to be somewhat softened, mainly in deference to the powerful and able chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rep. Wilbur Mills of Arkansas. The reduction in corporate and individual income taxes are to be asked for in stages, running through this year and next. Thus the whole loss of revenue will not occur at once.

Nonetheless, the central issue will certainly be the validity of the theory clearly stated by President Kennedy in his imporhope to ask for tax cuts "in the

ALMA MATER - The London School of Economics is famed for its many illustrious former students - among them President

It is also justly proud of the diversity of men who have studied there - among them Sen. John Tower, the Texas Republican who is one of the Senate's most vocal advocates of conservatism in government.

It is hard to understand how a school of economics could produce two former students whose views on economics are as far apart as are Kennedy's and Tower's.

The two former students at the same school travel in different circles in Washington, and rarely meet. On the one occasion that they did come together on Capital Hill, they devoted all their time to reminiscing about the school. While there was no discussion of their clashing economic philosophies, they learned they had one thing in common - both still are avid readers of the London Economist.

SUCH IS FAME - During two efforts at the presidency and his service as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Adlai E. Stevenson has become one of the most easily recognizable persons in American public life.

The other day, an elderly couple touring the Capitol came upon the marble bust of Adlai E. Stevenson, vice president under Grover Cleveland, from 1893 to 1897. He is the grandfather of our Adlai of current times, and in the fashion that was general then sported a heavy, sweeping mus-eral deficits on the other . . . It is a paradoxical fact that tax rates are too high today, and tax revenues are too low (to balance the budget), and the best way to raise revenues in the long run is to cut rates now. In other words, the aim is still to balance the budget, at least at some future date. But the old tial national security programs...

Our true choice is not between tax reduction, on the one hand, and the avoidance of large Fed-

methods are considered to have Hence it is proposed to use the wholly new method of big rate reductions both for individuals and corporations — the corporate income tax, for instance, may be cut by four or five points, from 52 per cent down to 47 or 48 per cent. And these tax cuts are in turn expected to cause such growth in national productivity and income that the eventual tax take will be far larger, even at the new, lowered rates, than the take is today. As proof of this, the Administration policy makers constantly cite the Eisenhower administration's $7 billion tax cut in 1954. The next year, the tax take was the same though the rates had been much reduced. The year after, the take was $7 billion higher than it had been before the $7 billion cut. This was because there was more income to tax.

Nonetheless, what some policymakers call the "mythology" of the balanced budget still has a strong hold in the country and the Congress. Hence the new approach to budget balancing, by growth - and - income - stimulation rather than by spending decreases by tax increases, is bound to touch off a debate of great heat and high importance.

Golden School Days

By John Crosby

GSTAAD, Switzerland

"I think there is a danger that the boys become too international, to such a degree that they don't realize the advantages in their home surroundings," Louis Johannot, who is director and co-owner of the most famous of Swiss schools, le Rosey, said to me. Coming from him it's quite an admission, since le Rosey is almost as international as the United States, its 190 students hailing from 35 countries.

The Aga Khan went to le Rosey, as did the Shah of Iran and numberless exalted rich kids. All you alumni who have been asked year after year to shell out for dear old Siwash will be dumbfounded to hear that not one of le Rosey's rich alumni, who collectively are worth billions of dollars, has ever given so much as a quarter to his old school. "We don't have that wonderful American tradition," sighed Mr. Johannot. "We don't have a penny of endowment funds.

Still, the le Rosey students live high on the hog. Le Rosey is the only school in the world with two settings. The students spend fall and spring at the le Rosey chateau halfway between Lausanne and Geneva, where playing fields and swimming pool are located. The winter months are spent in fine chalets in Gstaad where the only playing fields are the mountains the boys ski down every day.

The flood of young Americans, a whole new phenomenon since World War II, is a great problem to all international schools, Johannot admitted. "We have 68 American boys here. It's by far the largest national representation and we believe it's too great a proportion," he said. "We resist it strenuously. We don't want to become an American school." Still, the pressures from rich Americans to get in are terribly strong. There are annually 700 applications for the 40 vacancies that open up and 500 of these applicants are American.

I asked him if there were any special problems Americans create. "One doesn't like to generalize," he murmured. "But natural phenomenon should not sometimes the manners are not be attributed to use of any drug, the best." American boys, I should add, suffer not so much from bad manners as from an absence of what the more ceremonial Europeans consider manners.

I talked to a 17-year-old Texas

kid at le Rosey who said: "I got in a lot of trouble the first year with my American manners. I didn't realize the European way of doing things. Well, I was a Texas hillbilly is what I was." Today the boy has manners that would do credit to a French marquis and he learned it all here. The flood of Americans, he said, is not elevating the American's manners so much as depressing

the European's manners. On the positive side, Mr. Johannot told me that his American boys were more socially aware than the European lads. (Remember these are rich kids. I don't think on the lower income levels that this would be so true.) "American boys know more about their own government than any other boys. The American is more extroverted, more friendly, more grown-up, more interested in other things. The European boy spends too much time buried in

The American boys don't as a rule stay in Europe; they go back home to Harvard, Yale, and the rest of the Eastern Seaboard schools, and Mr. Johannot admits they have a very grave problem

"They can't find common points of interest with the other American boys," he said. For one thing, le Rosey boys are forbidden alcohol absolutely and Johannot says they find the Saturday night beer-drinking sprees in American colleges boring.

I asked several American parents about le Rosey's reputation for snobbery. One of them said: "Unless you're very rich, don't send your son there. He won't be able to keep up. Also, he gets habits of luxury" (le Rosey boys are waited on hand and foot) "that they'll find hard to break. The younger boys don't feel it so much" (le Rosey goes from fourth grade through high school) "but I notice this year my son wealth, not of color or religion of which every shade is welcome. One of the students is young Kasavubu, the son of the Congolese leader (who finds the weather much colder than he likes). In its dealings with foreign countries, Coca-Cola is careful to avoid the taunts of "coca-colonization" by letting local entrepreneurs build and own the bottling plants, the glass works, the metal-working establishments, and the lithographic industries, that are needed to bring the product to the customer. But the benefits deriving from the diffusion of ownership among the local populations were not limited to indigenous capitalists. A metal working industry, formed to produce bottle caps, soon branched out in many countries to provide other types of metal products.

Glass works created to make soft drink containers found themselves taking orders for medicine bottles. Local truck services, using Coca-Cola maintenance manuals, were quickly plunged into a general garage business, with the result that the lifetime of a truck in the Middle East or Africa has been extended to five years instead of the traditional one. As for the lithography needed to make Coca-Cola posters, it created modern printing businesses in a number of countries.

To its establishments in Atlanta, Georgia, and elsewhere in the United States and Canada, Coca-Cola brings hundreds of young native foreign executives every year on its own version of the Fulbright scholarships. Turbaned Indians mingle with Chinese from Malaya and Latins from South America as they go about the United States for three-month capsule courses in modern management techniques. And the hundreds who go back to Africa and Asia carry advanced management know-how with them to indoctrinate thousands of their countrymen who never leave home.

Thus the benefits from a voluntary foreign aid program are spread like seeds from a bursting milkweed pod. It beats anything that Washington has been able to dream up. (Copyright, 1963, King Features Syndicate, Inc.) 'He Definitely Took A Step Backward'

Rep. Powell Fires Female Aide; More Background On 'Skybolt'

WASHINGTON - Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, the "Harlem globe-trotter," has fired one of the young ladies whom he took with him on the famed junket last summer when he asked the State Department to arrange tickets for the best shows in London, a table at the Lido night club in Paris, and a possible cruise among the Greek islands.

The lady dropped is Mrs. Tamara Wall, a lawyer and former special counsel for Powell's Labor and Education Committee. Mrs. Wall accompanied the beautiful Miss Corrine Huff, the first Negro to be chosen as Miss Ohio, on the Powell trip.

Miss Huff, a runner-up in the Miss America beauty contest, is being retained as a receptionist in Powell's office.

Mrs. Wall, a brilliant young lawyer, is perhaps the only government worker ever to be interned in Siberia and escape.

Mrs. Wall was only seven years old when she was sent to Siberia during the war. Born in Russia, her family were arrested by the Germans on the way to America when the war broke and returned to Russia where the Soviet government, suspicious of anyone residing in Germany, sent them to

JFK's Proposal To Macmillan

More information has now leaked out regarding the Skybolt and the conversations between Prime Minister Macmillan and President Kennedy over this much-discussed air-to-ground missile.

At the Nassau talks, Kennedy told the British Prime Minister that the United States would go ahead with the original Skybolt deal whereby the United States developed this missile for the British, provided England paid one-half of the remaining development costs — about $2,300,000,000.

Macmillan, however, declined, accepted the Polaris instead. Since then, despite all the hue and cry in the British press, the British government has already started plans for constructing seven Polaris submarines. They will carry a total of 112 Polaris missiles, which is 12 more than the 100 Skybolts which the British had originally intended to buy.

Incidentally, the Air Force has been completely on the level with the President in its arguments for the Skybolt. I now find that the flamboyant colored advertisements which appeared in the magazines during the height of the Skybolt arguments were OK'd by the Defense Department, not the Air Force. Furthermore, they were OK'd in October 1961, not October 1962 -more than one year ago. Obviously, the Defense Department did not know the missile was going to be the center of such an international controversy at the time. Douglas had published the ads earlier, then reused them at this crucial time to influence public and Congressional think-

Note - last week, a full-page ad appeared in Look Magazine indicating that the public utility lobby was also getting into the act on the side of Douglas. ### Golden School Days

By John Crosby

GSTAAD, Switzerland "I think there is a danger that the boys become too international, to such a degree that they don't realize the advantages in their home surroundings," Louis Johannot, who is director and co-owner of the most famous of Swiss schools, le Rosey, said to me. Coming from him it's quite an admission, since le Rosey is almost as international as the United States, its 190 students hailing from 35 countries. The Aga Khan went to le Rosey, as did the Shah of Iran and numberless exalted rich kids. All you alumni who have been asked year after year to shell out for dear old Siwash will be dumbfounded to hear that not one of le Rosey's rich alumni, who collectively are worth billions of dollars, has ever given so much as a quarter to his old school. "We don't have that wonderful American tradition," sighed Mr. Johannot. "We funds. Still, the le Rosey students live high on the hog. Le Rosey is the only school in the world with two settings. The students spend fall and spring at the le Rosey chateau halfway between Lausanne and Geneva, where playing fields and swimming pool are located. The winter months are spent in fine chalets in Gstaad where the only playing fields are the mountains the boys ski down every day.

don't have a penny of endowment

The flood of young Americans, a whole new phenomenon since World War II, is a great problem to all international schools, Johannot admitted. "We have 68 American boys here. It's by far the largest national representation and we believe it's too great a proportion," he said. "We resist it strenuously. We don't want to become an American school." Still, the pressures from rich Americans to get in are terribly strong. There are annually 700 applications for the 40 vacancies that open up and 500 of these applicants are American. I asked him if there were any special problems Americans create. "One doesn't like to generalize," he murmured. "But sometimes the manners are not the best." American boys, I should add, suffer not so much from bad manners as from an absence of what the more ceremonial Euro-

kid at le Rosey who said: "I got in a lot of trouble the first year with my American manners. I didn't realize the European way of doing things. Well, I was a Texas hillbilly is what I was." Today the boy has manners that would do credit to a French marquis and he learned it all here. The flood of Americans, he said, the European's manners. On the positive side, Mr. Johannot told me that his American boys were more socially aware than the European lads. (Remember these are rich kids. I don't think on the lower income levels that this would be so true.) "American boys know more about their own government than any other boys. The American is more extroverted, more friendly, more grown-up, more interested in other things. The European boy spends too much time buried in his studies."

is not elevating the American's manners so much as depressing

The American boys don't as a rule stay in Europe; they go back home to Harvard, Yale, and the rest of the Eastern Seaboard schools, and Mr. Johannot admits they have a very grave problem readjusting to American ways.

"They can't find common points of interest with the other American boys," he said. For one thing, le Rosey boys are forbidden alcohol absolutely and Johannot says they find the Saturday night beer-drinking sprees in American colleges boring. I asked several American parents about le Rosey's reputation for snobbery. One of them said: "Unless you're very rich, don't send your son there. He won't be able to keep up. Also, he gets habits of luxury" (le Rosey boys are waited on hand and foot) "that they'll find hard to break. The younger boys don't feel it so much" (le Rosey goes from fourth grade through high school) "but I notice this year my son is getting awfully cocky. He's 13."

This snobbery is entirely of wealth, not of color or religion of which every shade is welcome. One of the students is young Kasavubu, the son of the Congolese leader (who finds the weather much colder than he likes). Kasavubu rooms with a young American boy from the South whose parents wrote asking Johannot if their son might change roommates. "I told them no, I didn't think I could do that," said Johannot simply.

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (UPI)-The Legislature's two main interim committees voted Monday to urge the 56th Legislature to create a division of alcoholism in the State Mental Health Department.

The action came as the Commission on Interstate Cooperation and Joint Committee on Government of Finance opened their final two-day meeting here before the Legislature convenes at noon Wednesday

The groups also recommended that the Legislature enact proposed bills to liberalize the investment of public funds, including the creation of a State Board of Investments and to provide technical revision in state adoption

The adoption law modifications are advocated by an interim subcommittee on welfare which last week submitted recommendations for consideration by the Legislature calling for broad changes in welfare programs.

The groups also approved an amendment to the public investments bill that would allow the State Road Commission, in effect, to borrow money from various funds for use in right of way ac-contingent on enactment of another piece of legislation that would allow the SRC to acquire rights of allow the SRC to acquire rights of way in advance of actual needs.

LOS ANGELES (UPI) Mighty Arnold Palmer, stampeding the opposition with another of his patented closing rushes, captured the $50,000 Los Angeles Open golf tournament Monday with a 274 score after a closing round of 66.

While Art Wall, Huston LaClair and Don Fairfield all took puny runs at the title, Palmer toured the course in 33-33 to pick up the first-place check of $9,000 - and start the new year where he left off last season
